

One Good Reason

Why Comparatively Few Sheep Are Raised On Canadian Farms

Canada can hardly be described as a great sheep-raising country. There are only about 8,000,000 head in the Dominion. In Australia, with about 123,000,000 head, it is the greatest sheep country in the world. India comes second with 94,000,000 head and goats.

There are several obvious reasons why sheep-raising has not so great an appeal for the Canadian farmer as the raising of sheep. One reason was stressed recently by the department of agriculture, it is the number of the pesting dog.

Many sheep breeders in Canada are of the opinion that it is practically impossible to raise sheep profitably on account of the large number of dogs which will kill sheep at large. They consider, as a nation, a country that uses more wolf per capita than any other country and which in wartime finds it well under the necessity of importing large quantities of wolf for war contracts and for government use.

One of the quotations that is put forth by the department of agriculture is that of sheep killed by dogs in one night's raiding in the province of Ontario. As a result of the measure of sheep dogs there has been a reduction of the number of sheep killed by dogs in one night's raiding from 100,000 to 10,000.

Unless a measure is taken to keep the number of dogs down, the sheep raising industry in Canada is doomed. This condition must not be regarded as serious in times of peace, but with the important agricultural commodities and exclusively for soldiers' clothing, it is a serious matter.

Race With Death

Single Allied Bomber Chased Twelve German Fighters

The pilot threw his first bomb...

...he was alone, too far from the first time in days—and dashed off to find for a grimace...

...the German plane, 20,000 feet above the earth, with death looming the end.

He returned a few hours later with a dozen German planes flying in the vicinity of his last...

...a score of precious planes in his command's machine.

He captured a German plane by a secret agent who had just slipped...

...through the German line. The man and his important movements of troops, materials and even planes were kept...

...his war at below-zero temperatures. He spoke on a headquarters...

...he was here—certainly with a radius of six miles.

But where? The map guard to secret well, the agent had to know...

...Only planes could reveal the exact spot where the German were concentrating.

On receipt of a coded order the pilot started his ping-pong game...

...his quarters, and responded to the voice of his enemy above the clouds.

His cumbersome suit was threaded with electric wires to keep him warm at below-zero temperatures.

He glared from behind the goggles of his respirator. His nose was a numbing numbness. He had no more to move on...

...against water. His gloves had soaked for his hand during the fight.

Experts Had Narrow Escape

Went Escaping Magnetic Mine With Detonator Still Attached

Germany started manufacturing magnetic mines as early as 1918. It was revealed when a full description of the mine was made.

Four men risked their lives to make the mine after it was captured from a German machine in the Thame river.
